Built during the 1970s, the Beneteau Evasion 32 reflects a period when yacht construction prioritized durability, practicality, and offshore capability over mass production efficiency. These boats were hand-laid in solid fiberglass, resulting in thick, robust hulls designed to withstand long passages and demanding conditions.

The construction methods of the time relied heavily on skilled craftsmanship rather than automation. Interiors were fitted with real wood joinery, giving each vessel a warm, traditional character and a sense of individuality rarely found in modern production yachts. Designed as a motorsailer, the Evasion 32 was engineered for versatility, combining reliable engine performance with steady sailing capabilities. Its raised deck saloon was a forward-thinking feature for the era, offering protected navigation and excellent visibility—ideal for extended cruising in varying weather.

Today, these yachts are appreciated for their solid build quality, classic lines, and enduring seaworthiness—qualities that continue to make them attractive on the brokerage market.
